WHAT THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN RESEARCH COMPUTING CENTER IS

The University of Michigan is one of the premier research institutions in the world with discoveries in cancer research, climate science, and more. The proposed Research Computing Center will be a state-of-the-art computing hub dedicated to continuing these advancements.

This facility will:

- Advance breakthrough research in medicine, clean energy, cybersecurity, and engineering
- Be Michigan's first National Laboratory investment
- Create 300 high-quality union jobs during development and 200 research and support roles upon opening
- Retain Michigan's top research talent
- Accelerate discoveries like new drug therapies and cancer treatments that improve people's lives
- Meet U-M's high standards for energy efficiency and sustainability, using 90% less energy than a data center and be much smaller in size
- Preserve approximately 80% of the 124-acre property as green space, including the Huron River waterfront

WHAT IT ISN'T

The University of Michigan Research Computing Center is NOT a Commercial Data Center. This facility will not support streaming, entertainment, social media, or e-commerce.

This facility will not:

- Operate as a commercial data center
- Burden the local community with the cost of its energy or water use
- Drain resources from the local community or raise utility rates
- Create smoke, odors, or significant noise

OUR COMMITMENTS TO THE COMMUNITY

U-M will fund a dedicated electrical substation, cover the facility's energy and water costs, protect local natural resources, and continue sharing information and listening to community concerns as plans move forward.
